1. Provide a summary of the paper using the outline presented in the appendix of Phillip Fong's paper from last week. You must include clearly labeled sections (each with a bold-faced header) named Motivation, Contribution, Methodology, and Conclusion. Note that you should provide at most one page of content this and subsequent questions, so your review will be an abbreviated version compared to Fong's recommendations. (40 pts)

2. Provide a critique of the paper using the outline presented in the appendix of Phillip Fong's paper from last week. You must include at least two, and no more than three, critiques. Each critique must be clearly identified (e.g., prepending the critique with "First critique:" and "Second critique:" must be well reasoned using objective, as opposed to subjective, criteria. You cannot include examples that the authors already mention in the paper. (30 pts)

3. Provide a synthesis of the paper using the outline presented in the appendix of Phillip Fong's paper from last week. You must include one, and no more than two, idea that describes how the work could be further developed. You cannot include examples that the authors already mention in the paper. (30 pts)
